Section B – Novels

(1) Read the following extract from "The Prince and the Pauper" and answer all the questions.

By this time she had crept to the slumbering boy's side, with the candle, shaded in her hand. she bent wearily over him, scarcely breathing, in her suppressed excitement, and suddenly flashed the light in his face and struck the floor by his ear with her knuckles. The sleeper's eyes sprung wide open, and he cast a startled stare about him - but he made no special movement with his hands.

The poor woman was smitten almost helpless with surprise and grief; but she contrived to hide her emotions, and to soothe the boy to sleep again; then she crept apart and communed miserably with herself upon the disastrous result of her experiment. She tried to believe that her Tom's madness had banished this habitual gesture of his; but she could not do it. 'No,' she said, 'his hands are not mad, they could not unlearn so old a habit in so brief a time. Oh, this is a heavy day for me!'

(2) Read the following extract from "The Vendor of Sweets" and answer all the questions given below it.

New things are coming your way; your son wants to go to America. Didn't I hint to you long ago that it was coming?

The first shock of the impact blanked out Jagan's mind for a time, and he caught his breath as he had a momentary panic at the thought of his son removing himself so far geographically. He inanely repeated, 'America! Why America? What has happened to his book? Has he written it? Hasn't he written it?

He thinks he will have to learn the arts in America.'

Jagan was furious at this notion; it was outrageous and hurt his national pride.

'Going there to learn storytelling! He should rather go to a village granny,' he said, all his patriotic sentiments surging.

"Exactly what I told him,' echoed the cousin.

'Did Valmiki go to America or Germany in order to learn to write his Ramayana? asked Jagan with pugnacity. Strange notions these boys get nowadays!' he said, avoiding gently any specific reference to his son. The head cook interrupted at this point, bringing in the flavour of kitchen smoke, in order to announce, 'Saffron stock out. Will last only another day.'

(3) Read the following extract from "Bringing Tony Home" and answer all the questions given below it.

Tony was faithfully by my side; since that reunion near the entrance to Mrs. Jayasingah's land he had kept close to me almost desperately not wanting to lose contact again, even ignoring the bun I bought for him though it looked quite certain to me that he had been starving in the last few days.

Fiendish barking and howling had erupted every now and then as we moved through foreign territory but had subsided when we kept going, and Tony kept as close to me as possible pressing against my legs to reassure himself that I was there with him.

Mr. Perera had gone to work at Cargills, his son Anton, my friend had gone to school with his two sisters - in fact all the children of the area were at some school somewhere because it was a weekday, and I had not gone to school because I had never gone to school and at that time I was still not going to school - and that's another story and on that day it suited me fine that none of the kids I knew were at home, because when you have a secret plan because it was close to midday and I was eager to get away because when you have a secret plan you want to keep moving all the time…

(i) What is the situation described here? Where does it take place?
